THE OATH. BY THOMAS SECRETAN BEAD. Hamler-Swear on my sword, Gnost (below)-Swear!-Shakepeare

Te freemen, how long will ye stifle
The vengeance that Justice inspires?
With Treason how long will ye trifle
And shame the proud name of your sires?
Out, out with the sword and the rifle
In defense of your homes and your fires.
The flag of the old Revolution
Swear firmly to serve and uphold.
That no treasonous breath of pollution
Shall tarnish one star of its fold.
Swear!
Ard bark, the deep voices replying
From graves where your fathers are lying,
"Swear, Oil, swear!"

In this moment who besitates, barters The right which his forefathers won, He forfeits all claim to the charters Transmitted from aire to son. And swear on your aword and your gun;
And swear on your aword and your gun;
Lay up your great oath on an after
An ingo and as strong as Stinebenge,
And then with sword, fire and balter,
Sweep down to the field of revenge.
Swear Swoar!

And hark, the deep voices replying, From graves where your fithers are lying, "Sweam, On, sweam!" The host which the traitors have slain, By the tears of year sisters and mothers, In secret cenevaling their pain, The grief which the herona amothers,

Consuming the heart and the brain; By the sigh of the penniless widow. By the sub of her orphan's despair, Where they ait in their serrowful shadow, Kneel, kneel, every freeman, and swear; Swear! And hark, the deep voices replying From graves where your fathers are lying, "SWEAR, OH, SWEAR!"

On mounds which are wet with the weeping . Where a nation has bowed to the sod, Where the noblest of martyrs are weeping.
Let the winds bear your vengcance abroad
And your firm oaths be held in the keeping Of your patriot hearts and your God. Over Ellsworth, for whom the first tear rose, While to Baker and Lyon you look; By Winthrep, a star among heroes, By the blood of murdered McCook, Swear!

And hark, the deep voices replying From graves where your fathers are lying, "Swean, On, sweam!"

But when it is basely perverted, as it has so often been since the lose of the war, it becomes at once the most hollow farce, and a standing insult thrust in the face of merit and courage, Instead of separating between those who made their mark in the field and those who isgraced themselves there; between the ighting men, and the skulkers; between those who lived at the front, and those who resided at hotels far in the rear; between those who fought battles, and those who indexed and filed the casualty lists here between those who directed armies and those who marshalled clorks; between those who faced storm, and heat, and battle sleet; and those who glittered in tinsel at parties and balls-this latest method of conferring honor not only mingles all these classes together, but so far as possible obliterates every trace of honor already won. Truly, in our military world, " the pen is mightier than the sword," and shirking, in the long run, brings the same reward as faithfulness and courage. H. V. N. B. and conrage.
